

APR 2 1962

Approved For Release 2000/08/03 : CIA-RDP75-0

25X1A

Dial M for Martyrdom: Liberated U-2 pilot FRANCIS GARY POWERS sojourned in his wife's home town of Milledgeville, Ga., happily ignorant of a fate conjured up for him by author IAN FLEMING. The British suspense novelist suggested that his fictional Secret Service chief M, boss of the rugged agent James Bond, would have disposed of the spy-plane incident by advising the Russians: "One of our experimental aircraft is indeed missing from our Turkish base and your description of the pilot fits in with a man who escaped yesterday from detention. This man Powers is a most unreliable person . . . P.S.: Powers suffers from hallucinations and delusions of grandeur." Where would that have left Powers? Fleming added cheerfully: "He was expendable. Expend him!"